NATALIE CALDERWOOD

Natalie Calderwood is vivacious and versatile. Her students soon discover that she is also a teacher who knows how to teach.

"Good counsellors lack no clients." Former V-12 students who became interested in writing while in her classes at K.U. continue to send her their manuscripts for criticism. Stimulated by her teaching, last semester's English 5 class requested continued meetings, and received an enthusiastic invitation to evening discussions this semester in the Calderwood home.

She plays a triple role. She is an instructor in the English department, the wife of Professor Bob Calderwood, and sister of Miss Margaret Habein, K. U.'s Dean of Women. Incidental to teaching, she is chairman of the English proficiency examination committee, writes book reviews and feature articles on literary subjects for the Kansas City Star, digs dandelions (in season), and plays the piano.

Tall attractive, Minnesota-born, she was a Phi Beta Kappa English major at Carleton College and received her Master's degree from Columbia University.

Perhaps the clue to Mrs. Calderwood's success with students is to be found in her interests,

"I thoroughly like teaching," she says, "and I like the inquisitive independent-minded students in college today."
